Here and There

Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN

THERE was a crowd at the First Baptist church corner, where no crowd gathers of a week-day noon—for Hope was paying her last tribute to Brice Arnett, veteran peace officer, collector of monthly town dues, and expert conversationalist on business and the weather.

Dykes Springs Is Proposed as Park in Centennial Year

To Be Discussed Before Hope City Council Tuesday Night

CITY HAS 35 ACRES

State to Construct Ten Tourist Recreational Centers for 1936

As the result of CWA inquiries between this city and Little Rock it is expected that a proposal to offer the city-owned property at Dykes Springs to the Arkansas Centennial Celebration Commission as one of the 10 tourist recreational parks for the state in 1936, will be laid before Hope city council Tuesday night.

Negotiations with the state commission were opened February 22 when R. B. Stanford, local CWA engineer, dispatched this telegram to Dallas T. Herndon, commission secretary: "The city of Hope owns an area of 62 acres known as the Dykes Springs property which it is anxious to offer for consideration by the recreation area committee. Can you suggest the proper person to receive this proposal?"

In reply, Mr. Herndon wrote: "I do not know whether there will be any more public hearings on the matter or not, as nothing has been decided on as yet. However, if you have a suitable place at Dykes Springs, I am sure that the commission will be glad to hear what you have to say about it and to submit your proposition on equal terms with other places proposed."

The necessary filing blanks have been obtained from A. W. Parke, Little Rock, executive secretary of the centennial commission; and the proposal will probably be discussed by the city council Tuesday.

The city owns 35 acres at Dykes Springs and an additional 27 acres owned by J. E. Ward, making a total of 62 acres, has recently been surveyed and mapped by Arthur Erwin, who donated his time to the project.

The Arkansas Centennial plans for construction of tourist scenic parks in 1936 depends upon a Public Works Administration loan.

Former Hope Men Cited for Heroism

Simpson and Vesey Commended for California Flood Rescues

W. H. Simpson and Robert Vesey, natives of Hope, the latter a brother of former Mayor John Vesey, have been cited for their heroism as members of the California State Rangers in rescuing CWA workers who were trapped by flood waters last January. This was learned by relatives here who last week received official notice from Simpson's and Vesey's commanding officers in the Ranger organization.

Ranks of Outlaws Are Thinning Out

Barrow, Floyd, Galatas Last to Remain at Liberty in Southwest

OKLAHOMA CITY.—(AP)—One by one the southwestern badmen of the bootleg school that graduated tough killers, bank robbers and kidnapers have been retributive justice either through showdowns with officers or at the hands of fellow outlaws. With the killing Saturday of Ford Bradshaw, one of the meanest of the southwestern "tough hombres," by an officer in an isolated eastern Oklahoma roadside, only a few names of young men known as bandit leaders were left on crime blotters.

Virtually every one of the outlaws able to gather weaker headlins under his command in this section started crime as a hip-pocket bootlegger. Bob Brady, Harvey Bailey, George Kelly, Wilbur Underhill, Bradshaw and his brothers, Aussie Elliott, Eldon Wilson, Ed Davis, Blackie Thompson, Whitey Walker, Raymond Johnson, Jim Clark, Frank Delmar and the rest—all but a bunch of bootleggers who branched

Airmail "Leak"; Morgan Sold Stock

4,500 Shares of United Sold Just Before U.S. Action

Senate Wants to Know Who Tipped Off New York Banking House

EXCHANGE PROBED

Meanwhile, House Investigates Rush Orders for Military Planes

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Searching for evidence of a "leak" in the cancellation of airmail contracts, the senate banking committee found Monday that J. P. Morgan & Co. sold a block of 4,500 shares of United Aircraft shortly before annulment of the contracts. The Morgan firm was named on a list of almost 500 long and short sellers of air company stocks during the two-week period just before the contracts were cancelled.

The list was furnished by the New York Stock Exchange in response to a senate subpoena.

Probe Military Purchases
WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Figures showing that the War Department spent 24 million dollars on airplanes in the last three and a half years of the Hoover administration and 5 million in the last three days put a new puzzle up to congressional investigators of army expenditures.

These figures were presented to the military affairs committee, which has been ordered by the house to investigate reported irregularities in the spending of the national defense money.

Committee members, chary of charges that they were conducting a partisan investigation for political advantage, said they had no intention of trying to put all the blame for the "5-million-dollar rush orders" on Republican office holders. As one member said:

"It must be remembered that regular officers of the army have had considerable influence on the civilian officials charged with responsibility for the contracts. Last March they were not certain as to what attitude the new president, his secretary of war, and his assistants, would take toward aviation."

$24,000,000 Spent
Detailed statements on all War Department contracts for airplanes, parts and equipment since 1926 have been submitted to the committee. These show, in the three and one-half years ending last March 4, contracts totaling $24,000,000.

But from mid-October to March 4, around $10,000,000, or nearly half the total, was contracted. And on March 1, 2, and 3, total commitments were roughly $5,000,000.

For nearly a month, the Military Affairs Subcommittee headed by Representative Rogers, Democrat, New Hampshire, has been attempting to determine who was responsible for the army's system of buying airplanes on "negotiated" instead of "competitive" contracts.

Members who helped draft the 1926 aircraft defense act say it was their intention to insure competition for quality purchases. But they have found that not once since 1926 were any airplane contracts open to competition.

They discovered that last January the Public Works Administration set aside $7,500,000 for the purchase of army airplanes. Army officers proposed to buy these through "negotiated" contracts.

Arkansas Poet Is Dead at Age of 30

Nancy T. Wilson, Prescott Writer, Succumbs at Little Rock

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Following an extended illness, Miss Nancy Temperance Wilson, 30, Arkansas poet of Prescott, died at a hospital here Sunday.

She was the daughter of H. J. Wilson and the late Mrs. H. J. Wilson of Prescott, and was a graduate of Prescott high school and Henderson-Brown State Teachers college at Arkadelphia.

She was the author of a recent volume of poems, "Scattering Stars," from which selections have been taken for radio programs in Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. One of her poems was selected by the national director of poetry to represent this state in the international poetry exhibit at the Century of Progress at Chicago.

Besides her father, Miss Wilson is survived by one sister, Mrs. Ross Jenkins of El Dorado. Funeral services will be held at Prescott.

Sheriff Lillian Holley of Lake county, Ind., who scorned the idea that John Dillinger, notorious outlaw, could escape from her jail, is shown here. In his flight, he had imprisoned all guards in cells. Then, with a machine gun taken from the jail office, he forced one of them to drive him to freedom in the sheriff's car.

Great Manhunt Is Begun for Dillinger

Police Net Spread Following Escape From Indiana Woman Sheriff

CHICAGO.—The law enforcing agencies of all branches of government in four states were engaged Sunday night in one of the most sensational manhunts in the history of the country with John Dillinger, desperado de luxe, object of the search.

The hunt spread over an ever-increasing area of the Middle West as hours passed since he fled a wood on pistol and walked out of the jail at Crown Point, Ind., Saturday morning. He thus is afforded the opportunity to flee farther from the scene of his forcible escape.

Indiana authorities were attempting to fix the blame for the lack of resistance to the department of a man deemed ferocious exploits of such desperados as Jesse James and the Younger brothers seem like mere mischief. State Attorney Robert G. Still of Lake county declared that his investigation may result in the prosecution of some persons for criminal neglect in permitting Dillinger to get away.

Highways in Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Missouri were being watched closely for Dillinger and a negro killer.

Bank Assets Hit New High Record

21 3-4 Billions at Close of 1933 Best Since National Holiday

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—National bank assets reached $21,747,483,000 at the close of 1933—a new high since last March's bank holiday.

The figures were made public Sunday by J. F. T. O'Connor, comptroller of the currency, in a summary of statistics on the December 30 national bank call.

The year-end assets were held by 5139 licensed national banks. They represented an increase of $48,834,000 over assets held by 5057 licensed banks on October 25, and a $886,992,000 boost over assets reported by 4902 banks last June 30.

The percentage of loans and discounts to total deposits reported as of December 30 was 46.06 as compared with 48.42 at the October call and 48.39 in June.

French Lindbergh, Believed Lost, Is Found in Germany

Fog Forced Him Down on Sea Hop From Paris to Copenhagen

CONTINUES FLIGHT

Costes Made Westward Crossing of Atlantic Four Years Ago

MUNSTER, Germany.—(AP)—Dieudonne Costes, known as "the Lindbergh of France," whom the world feared lost when he actually had landed here Saturday night because of fog, took off at noon Monday for Copenhagen, Denmark.

Costes did not know until four hours before his departure Monday that he was the object of a wide search after he failed to complete on schedule his flight from Paris to Copenhagen.

When the famous aviator encountered fog over Bremen, Germany, he headed into Munster to await better weather.

Flew the Atlantic

Costes in the plane "Question Mark" nearly four years ago with Maurice Bellonte made the 4,100-mile trip from Paris to New York in 37 hours and 17 minutes.

Both France and America acclaimed his feat on September, 1930, as comparable to that of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, whom Costes entertained at dinner in Paris last fall.

Born in Gascony, Costes possesses the fierce independence of his countrymen. He six times held world records.

The 41-year-old flier is a veteran of aviation, starting his career in 1912 when he entered the Ecole de l'aviation, then the Ecole de l'aviation for pilots. His spectacular exploits began with service in the World war, when he was wounded and won 11 citations for bravery.

Lindbergh of France
Costes first established a world record in 1926 on a flight with Captain Rignot from Paris to Djask, Siberia. With Lieut. Joseph Lebrun in 1927 he was the first to fly the South Atlantic from shore to shore. The following year he astounded the world by flying from Tokyo to Paris with Lebrun in less than six days' elapsed time.

In 1929 he regained the world's distance record by flying with Bellonte to Manchuria. In the same year he set two endurance records. This led to the pinnacle of his fame—his flight with Bellonte to America.

When Costes and Bellonte subsequently flew to Dallas, Texas, and toured America they were honored at luncheon by President Hoover.

Landscape Series of Stories Praised

Experiment Station Director Declares Gray Articles Valuable

Editor The Star: Being interested in landscape gardening, I want to express my appreciation of the practical and timely series of landscape articles by Donald Gray.

Although we have many volumes and pamphlets on the subject, Mr. Gray handled it in a very fine way for the layman. I clipped each article and carefully arranged them in a scrap book, only to find the whole series printed jointly in the tabloid in your Thursday paper.

These kinds of articles should be very educational and practical for the community. Expressions indicate such.

Emergency Works New Relief Agency

CWA to Be Liquidated in Arkansas by March 16

LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—The Emergency Works Corps is the name of the new federal organization that will replace the Civil Works Administration (CWA). State Director Dyess informed his office here from Washington Monday.

At the same time he advised that the Civil Works program in Arkansas will be brought to an end not later than March 16.

Roosevelt's First Anniversary Sees Long-Term Farm Planning

Emergency Relief Period Closing, and Permanent Program Will Be Put Into Effect for American Farmer

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—The close of the first year of the Roosevelt administration over the week-end found its program for restoring agriculture approaching the end of the emergency period and standing on the threshold of permanent policy.

Secretary Wallace and his assistants say the entire first year's work in obtaining retirement of land from production through rental payments was to create a stop-gap to carry the nation's farmers through the adjustment period until the permanent program can provide relief.

They point out that the declared purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act—"to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power"—has been achieved in part by the payment of $289,000,000 in rental and benefit payments direct to farmers, in return for which they agreed to reduce their cotton, wheat, and tobacco crops.

The administration also has put out $61,000,000 in loans on stored corn, $56,000,000 on cotton loans, $48,000,000 on profits to cotton growers on government-held cotton, $35,796,000 in the pig-buying campaign of last fall, and $32,433,637 in purchasing butter, cheese, pork, and other farm products to relieve the surplus situation and provide food for families on relief rolls.

During 1934 the administration expects to spend about $1,000,000,000 in obtaining cuts in production of cotton, wheat, corn, hogs, milk and its products, beef, tobacco and other crops. This money will come chiefly from

Hope Boy, Driving Truck, Kills Man

Lieut. Ellis, Greenland Hero, Dies in Fayetteville Traffic Accident

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark.—Lieut. Edward Frank Ellis, 31, retired army officer, was struck by a motor truck as he started to cross a street here about 7:30 Saturday night, and died almost instantly.

The truck belonged to the LaNier Cleaning Company and was driven by Royce Weisenberger of Hope, a student in the Law School of the University of Arkansas. He was released on bond.

Lieutenant Ellis had started for the home of a friend, about a block from the scene of the accident, to play bridge. It was said his eyesight was failing, and that he probably did not see the approaching truck. Officers expressed the opinion that the accident was unavoidable.

Lieutenant Ellis has been retired since a few months after the return of the historic expedition that went to Greenland in the attempt to rescue Gen. A. W. Greely who was stranded in the Arctic where he had led a party sent to establish a government Weather Bureau near the north pole. The rescue trip, made in 1893, failed when the expedition's ship was wrecked in arctic waters. Members of the crew spent six weeks in small whaleboats, traveling back down the coast before they encountered their base ship.

Greeley and the six remaining members of his party of 24 were rescued by another expedition the next year. Eye injuries suffered during the harrowing experiences necessitated Ellis' retirement. He had enlisted in the army Signal Corps only a few months before he volunteered to join the rescue expedition.

Officers said they believed no charges would be filed against Weisenberger, who was driving the truck that struck Ellis.

Hut to Be Opened by Nevada Legion

Celebration Monday Night at Prescott Post's New Building

Nevada county legionnaires are celebrating the completion of their Legion hut and community building with an open-house for guests Monday night.

Members of the Leslie Huddleston post, and their wives or sweethearts have been invited. Tom J. Compton is commander of the Sam B. Hooker post, Nevada county Legion unit. Several Hope people expected to attend.

Charles Q. Kelley, state Legion commander, and several state officials of the CWA have been invited.

The hut, 30 by 60 feet, was constructed of logs, with hardwood floors and a stone fireplace. CWA furnished the labor, ceiling and floors, windows and doors. The Prescott post paid for the balance of the cost.

Private Industry Must Carry Load; NRA Court Victory

U. S. Supreme Court Upholds N. Y. Minimum Milk-Price Law

URGES UNIONIZATION

President Promises NRA Chiefs Government Will Back Up Codes

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—President Roosevelt Monday asked American industry for its immediate co-operation to secure an increase in wages and a shortening of hours. "It is the immediate task of industry to re-employ more people at purchasing wages and to do it now," he declared.

Up to Industry
Speaking to several thousand members of the NRA code authorities assembled in Constitutional Hall for a three-day review of the industrial control program, he warned:

"The government can not forever continue to absorb the whole burden of unemployment."

He called for greater protection for small business, terming the code authority "the keeper of your small industrial brother."

He said the anti-trust laws "must continue in their major purpose of retaining competition and preventing monopoly."

For Union Labor
He demanded that every corporation in the United States give its workers the free choice of organizing, and emphasized that "those two words 'free choice' mean just what they say."

Saying he knew that industry with few exceptions would give wholehearted compliance, the president warned that in these exceptions "the government itself must and will under the law move firmly and promptly to prevent failure."

He contended that industry must keep "the lowest schedule of prices on which higher wages and increasing employment can be maintained."

Federal Judge Is Victim of Suicide

Judge E. F. Cochran Hangs Himself in South Carolina Home

CHARLESTON, S. C.—(AP)—United States District Judge District Judge Ernest Ford Cochran, 68, was found hanged with a silken scarf tied to a bedpost in his home here Sunday.

Mrs. Cochran discovered his body when she went to his room about 10:30 a. m. Coroner John P. DeVeaux Jr. said the death was a suicide and that Judge Cochran had been dead since before midnight.

Although he had suffered from a nervous disorder since last July, lately he had been coming to his office regularly and was believed improving.

Judge Cochran, a Republican, was appointed judge of the Eastern District of South Carolina November 24, 1923, by President Coolidge, to succeed the late Judge H. A. M. Smith. He had served two terms as district attorney, the second time in the Western District after the state had been divided.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

Death Grapple Is Staged on Securities
Act . . . Plea of Byrnes Saves Hogan
U. S. Lays Off Manchukuo
Swanson May Resign Soon
Bonus Advocates Maneuver for Filibuster.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON—The "money changers" are encountering a stiff fight from the embattled administration liberals.

The battleground is the White House, where every possible ounce of pressure is being directed against the Wall Street effort to modify both the Securities Act and the stock market control bill now before Congress.

Disciples of Justice Brandies lead the counter-attack. They receive inspiration and counsel from the snow-haired liberal jurist, who believes the rigid provisions of the Securities Act are nothing which honest men can't meet; from Prof. Felix Frankfurter of Harvard, Federal Trade Commissioner James Landis—two chief sponsors of the act and bill—and Treasury Fiscal Adviser Murray Eccles.

Like-minded are Senator Duncan Fletcher and Congressman Sam Rayburn, committee chairmen who have the bill in charge.

But standing with Wall Street in this issue is Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., and liberals fear that Roosevelt is being won over to the other side.

Countering the argument that penalty provisions in the Securities Act are impeding restoration of the capital goods market, Eccles and other liberals are pushing for a huge program of government—underwritten bank loans for home building and repair.

Plea Saves Hogan
Senator Hugo Black, the airman investigator, was all set with a resolution to cite Attorney Frank Hogan for contempt of the Senate. But Senator Jimmy Byrnes of South Carolina called him off.

Byrnes pleaded fervently, not as an administration spokesman—which he often is—but as an old friend of the smart lawyer who kept E. L. Doherty out of jail during the oil scandals and who had incurred Senate wrath by his guidance of William P. MacCracken in the latter's vain attempt to avoid a contempt trial.

"Lay Off" Manchukuo
Don't go believing reports that this administration soon will ratify Japan's Manchurian conquests by recognizing the state of Manchukuo. Officials privately say they're quite comfortable in their position of non-recognition and interested only mildly in stories that Germany soon may reach an agreement with Japan.

Although it may become expedient for us to recognize the "puppet state" sooner or later—possibly in connection with next year's naval treaty negotiations—present feeling is that we aren't losing any Manchurian trade by our existing attitude, whereas recognition easily might offend the Chinese and seriously affect our large export trade with them.

Swanson May Quit
Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson, the oldest cabinet member and lately not in very good health, is likely to resign before long. But no one is worrying much about that or the identity of his successor.

Former Mayor James M. Cuffley of Boston is a candidate and he or some other politician doubtless will be named. But Roosevelt, once an assistant secretary of the navy and always enthusiastically interested in the fleet, always will be "his own secretary" there to a greater extent than in any other department.

Spar on Veterans Issue
The Senate veterans' bloc had a Huey Long filibuster ready to spring on the Democratic leadership when Byrnes and Joe Robinson's administration captains, decided to bring the veterans' benefit issue to a final vote before the bloc was ready.

The advocates of large-scale restoration were sore because the test had been postponed while Byrnes was ill a couple of days, but they were being pressed thereafter when three of their big guns—Cutting, Wheeler and Reed—suddenly went on the sick list.

But Robinson of Indiana and other veteran friends meanwhile became so long-winded that the vote went over the week-end and Huey's effort wasn't necessary.

An old farmer was asked when he thought had times would be over.

"Well," he said, "I've lived through a good many such days as these and I've notice that they're most always just about last out three pair of pants. I'm on my third now and the seat is so thin if I sit on a penny I can tell whether it's heads or tails, so I think we're pretty near out of the woods."

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Don't Force a Child to Make Too Many of His Own Decisions.

How "conflicts" in the child mind lead to so much unhappiness in later life is interestingly described by Olive Roberts Barton in another article in her series on Child Training.

Another popular term used in mental hygiene is "conflict." "Conflict" as a complete study is a large subject. Like "complexes," conflicts are responsible for so much unhappiness in life that deserve a more thorough search than is possible here.

The word means what it says—a fight. A fight between duty and desire, usually, or between good and bad; or sometimes between one emotion and another, or between two duties.

The mind wears itself out trying to make a choice.

Sometimes a single conflict will cover a period of days, or weeks or even years. Again it will last but a moment. An acute conflict will upset mental equilibrium and, if continued, may undermine the industry of the brain sufficiently to do permanent damage.

Tiny children who have not yet become "social," that is, keenly conscious of their duties to people, or who have not developed a strong moral sense, are not bothered much with conflict. It is in the next stage, particularly that one in which we stress the virtues and duty and gratitude and all the rest of it, that conflict may appear.

Conscience Struggles
A child now has every opportunity for these mental fights. For instance he wants to do something very much, something is not wicked or wrong, but that must be weighed against duty. He wants to go swimming but he knows he should be gathering eggs. If he chooses the creek he knows he will pay up for it by either fear or a guilty conscience. Just how guilty he will feel depends on how strongly "duty" or "gratitude" has been impressed on him, and how heinous such a deed now appears in his eyes.

As a rule children of unsensitive temperament do not have to many conscience struggles, but some do. And brooding results.

If this boy decides on the eggs, and foregoes his swim, there will be unhappiness of another kind very likely. And so whichever way he decides, the chances are he will be disturbed and unhappy.

Older people may learn to choose quickly without worrying, if they have any philosophy, they put away from the mind the other alternative. Once a decision is reached they stick to it and avoid post-mortem inspections. Children have not this philosophy.

With the new theory of "self-expression" at work and children being forced to make most of their own decision, it seems to me this is one weak point in the system. To make too many choices wears a child out. It is often a relief to hear a voice say, "Go and practice," or to be picked up and carried off to bed. It saves so much nerve-rub if someone else takes at least part of the responsibility.

Conflicts seldom concern a choice in "things." They concern more the pull between duty and desire, or between two forms of each. Their worst characteristic is that as life widens, they begin to involve other feelings and processes, and a load of them or even one, if long carried, can easily wind up in neurosthenia or ill-health in maturity. They are decidedly a wrench in the mental and physical machinery.

Caller: "I know all of your family except your brother Hal W. Which side of the house does he look like?"

"Fireweed," by Mildred Walker, exploits a field which has been surprisingly neglected by American authors—the lumber towns of Michigan, where a virile and prodigious industry destroyed the forests of a state, created a great boom, and then left a long string of little cities and villages to cope with a steady, cumulative depression.

It's a good novel, too, sensitive, discerning, and well written; all in all, one of the best on the winter's list. It tells about a girl in a little lumber town on the state's upper peninsula. The girl's father works in the town's sawmill, her mother keeps a boarding house for mill hands, and she herself clerks in a store. She is married presently, to a husky youth who also works in the mill.

Now this girl has one hope in life—to get away from the little mill town,

The ROMANTIC RUNAWAY

by KATHARINE HAVILAND-TAYLOR

BEGIN HERE TODAY
PABLITO, a handsome 17-year-old youth, works at the paintless

Florida home of millionaire JIM FIELD. The son of a titled Englishman and a servant girl, Pablito knows nothing of his parents. When 12 years old he ran away from ANGELA, the heartless old nurse in whose care he was left. Since then he has lived with NORMA NOYES, a mysterious individual who has seen better days.

Field's estranged wife and their daughter, ESTELLE, arrive at the Florida home. Pablito sees Estelle and almost at once falls in love with her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER IV

AT the door of his wife's rooms Field paused and knocked. A maid he remembered admitted him and, as she saw him, her face grew hard and chill. He heard her murmur something about seeing if Madame could see him and he waited in the gray and silver sitting room. In a few moments Norma appeared and settled herself in a low chair. Field pulled another close to her and dropped into it.

"I wanted to tell you, Norma, that I appreciate your attitude to Estelle about me."

She answered in a level undertone, her eyes on the rug at her feet. "I want to preserve for her as long as possible," she said, "all the illusions that make life happen. Then, too, you were not there—and I was. I couldn't very well say anything ill of you."

He did not fully understand this. She saw it and smiled a trifle wanly.

"You don't see much logic in that, do you?" she questioned.

"I see what you're getting at all right," he answered honestly, "but I think it's bunk!"

"It is only decent."

He paid no attention to this but went on. "Norma—are you going to tell her now?"

She stiffened, becoming erect and tense. "It would kill all that I have done my best to nurture in her," she answered with the first show of the old warmth and feeling he had heard in her voice. "We will have to pretend a great many things that aren't true and that I know now never were true."

"I'll try to make it easy for you," he promised a trifle thickly. He found himself close to unsteadiness from the relief her words had brought him.

"Jim," she began slowly and less confidently, "will you promise me to be careful about the things, the people—women I mean—whom she sees?"

"My dear Norma, I am less the glibest blunty. I am 59," he answered bluntly.

She nodded, her head a bit high, her eyes suddenly chill. Then she stood up with the manner of royalty at the moment of a dismissal. Presently Field found himself outside in the glare of the sunlight. The way Norma's head could lift, so proudly, had always made him feel himself to be crude and rough. This, with her dislike of scenes and her withdrawal into silence, had made him more crude and rougher.

Again and again Pablito found her face turned his way.

trick, he realized; the trick of making him feel far beneath her. "Damn it!" he thought, blinking in the sunlight. But there was a reason for him to endure it now. The reason was a slender girl who looked much as Norma had when he had married her with the intent to tame her and "bring her down a bit."

AT the end of a dock which stretched long and black in the water Field saw Pablito swabbing out a fishing boat. He saw also the enchanting blue of the white-decked water and the sway of the tall palms against the depths of an almost cloudless, silver-blue sky. Estelle would no doubt delight in such things, as her mother had before her. The camp had amazed her. Well, there was no other like it, he decided contentedly.

He followed the dock which smelled of seaweed and salt and was always darkened and damp from spray and when he was near Pablito he spoke to him.

"Nice day, Smith."

Pablito stood erect. "Yes, sir. Fine," he agreed.

"Lord, you're a good-looking specimen," Field thought. He said aloud, "You usually run the 'Silver Dart,' don't you? I may go out in it later."

"Yes, sir."

Field turned then to go back to the land. Would Estelle go out with her father, Pablito wondered.

NORMA FIELD stood in the gray and silver sitting room where her husband had left her, remembering the aftermath of one of their early estrangements. She had been stricken by remorse and returned to him, expecting to find him overcast by grief over her departure and alone. He had, on the contrary, been neither overcast—nor alone!

Then she remembered "trying again"; endless efforts at "trying again." She remembered the bruises which had come, oddly enough, from promises that were as weak as water. After that—some time after that—she had come old and lost her hold upon hope and at last the worst of his sins were but pallid heads in the long, dark chain that made her nights and days.

She had been like Estelle once, she realized, physically and mentally. Gentle to pain, hard in defending others from it. Kind to others but stern with herself. The woman she had become let her see the child she had been. A lovely child—the child Estelle echoed.

Norma Field stirred and moved toward her dressing room. She thought, "I don't ask much any more but oh, he must be careful!"

get out into the great world, find a better life than her own town can offer her, escape from the eternal domination of the lumber camp and the sawmill.

And her husband doesn't want to go. He likes the wild northern Michigan country, the cool breath of Lake Superior, the close-to-nature air of his environment.

The town goes into a slow decline, as dwindling timber resources and a national depression force camp and mill to shut down, and it is the husband who gets his way. He and his wife stay on, left high and dry by the receding tide.

Miss Walker has managed to get the "feel" of those Michigan lumber towns on paper in a remarkable way, and her book is exceptionally readable.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

Try These Exercises to Give You That Early Morning Pep

A few simple exercises, done in bed (think goodness!), give that early-morning pep that so many yearn for. Stumbling out of bed with half-closed eyes and wobbly legs does not always mean that you haven't had enough sleep. It may indicate that you require a little time to wake up completely, and perhaps one or two stretches and some exercises will do the trick.

Ready? Let's go! Lie flat on your back and discard the pillow (you shouldn't use one anyway). Stretch arms high over head, pulling the muscles in your back and sides upward. Point your toes downward until you can feel a definite "pull" on all the leg muscles. Relax and repeat several times.

Then raise your right arm above your head and stretch upward toward the left, placing the left hand on the right side just below that floating rib. Make believe that your left hand is pulling your torso right out of its socket above the hip. Then reverse, stretching the left hand above the head and using the right hand to help pull your body upward.

It was a blindly aimed prayer, the only sort she could say now, failing to believe in much of anything. She had cared a great deal for Jim Field in her pitifully young years, she realized. She hoped Estelle would never care for any man quite so much as she cared for herself.

THAT afternoon Pablito took Estelle and Jim Field for the first of their many rides together in the "Silver Dart." Estelle was stirred to silence by the riotous color, the salt languor of the air, the blazing yellow and the utter greenness of the shore.

"I think," she said slowly, "that I have never seen any place so beautiful!" As she spoke her eyes rested upon Pablito and, seeing him, she knew suddenly that she had never seen a young man who was so fine in form and face. She did not mention this. She could only wish, with a new hunger, that they might be friends. She was sure this youth with the blue eyes and straw-colored hair would be a friend worth having.

The men in the boat saw her; nothing and no one else. Field watched her steadily with a slight smile lifting and softening his some times cruel lips. Pablito's eyes followed her with a breathless awe. He saw her as a rare mixture of child and woman. She had a dignity, unusual in American girls, which made her at times seem far beyond her years. At other times, with the faint showing of a soft trustfulness, she was sweetly young. Appallingly young, Pablito thought, knowing Field.

"She knows everything of good," he decided tenderly, "and nothing of evil." And for a moment his heart turned cold as he wondered what lay before her.

Estelle's soft brown hair blew and color came into her cheeks which were a little thin because she had been growing so fast. It could not help watching her almost steadily. And again and again he found her face turned his way.

The hum of the motor and the swish of water as it broke to a white-churned froth kept Pablito from hearing much that was said, but one question of Field's shook his world for him because it brought her close.

Field said, "I think I'll have a fancy dress party for you here. Would you like that?"

"Oh, yes!" Estelle answered and because she had been so suddenly warmly and vibrantly happy Pablito smiled without knowing it until she answered his smile. No woman or girl had ever smiled on him before unless tendering him, with her lift of lips, the wrong sort of invitation.

A barefoot boy who guards a drunkard does not hold the key that opens doorways into kindness. Now he knew kindness and the difference in smiles and the knowledge was so beautiful that it brought an ache to his breast. He thought, "I love you and it's not puppy stuff. You're beautiful and kind. I love you!"

And so came the love of a lifetime to a land where there is warmth and early ripening.

30 Days That Rocked the Nation

Reviewing the Crash—One Year After

We humbly ask the blessing of God. May He protect each and every one of us." A nation listened with bated breath as the new president delivered his inaugural address.

Nineteenth and Twentieth Days—March 4-5

Before dawn on Saturday, March 4, a year ago, further bank moratoriums were declared in Iowa, Missouri, and Minnesota. Before 10 a. m. it was known that neither the New York Stock Exchange nor the other markets of the country would open that day.

Franklin Roosevelt went first to St. John's church for prayer and a brief service. Then he drove to the White House, picked up President Hoover, and drove to the Capitol.

A huge crowd of perhaps 100,000 stood waiting in the plaza before the east front of the Capitol as, at 1:06 p. m. Franklin Roosevelt, resting his hand on an old Dutch family Bible, repeated after Chief Justice Hughes his oath of office.

Then, wearing no hat or overcoat in the chill breeze, he swung into his inaugural address while a nation listened, breathless.

"The people of the United States have not failed . . . They have asked for discipline and direction under leadership . . . In this dedication of a nation we humbly ask the blessing of God. May He protect each and every one of us. May He guide me in the days to come."

These words brought to many hearts not confidence, but at least hope.

American Woman Lawyer Rebuked

Object of a trans-Atlantic legal rebuke was attractive Fanny Holtzman (above), American lawyer at present in New York. Sir William Jowett, defense counsel in the $2,000,000 libel suit brought against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures in London by Princess Yousouf, suggested in court that Miss Holtzman was "exploiting" the Princess by persuading her to file a suit for damages based on incidents in the film "Rasputin". Miss Holtzman branded Sir William's rebuke "a shopworn trick of abusing an adversary".

processing taxes. And through the year officials will perfect and begin putting into effect the permanent program of buying sub-marginal farm land moving families to other areas, and converting it into timber production and erosion control areas, and game preserves and sanctuaries.

A sum of $25,000,000 has been appropriated from Public Works funds to start this week. Further funds will be provided as needed, officials believe, enabling the administration permanently to relieve the surplus of farm products, better the economic status and living standards of thousands of farm families, and provide timber resources and recreation areas.

or, Herbert Youngblood, whom the outlaw invited to accompany him from the Crown Point prison. Automobiles answering the description of the one in which the men left Crown Point were reported seen in many places. After it was believed Dillinger had been seen in a southern Illinois town headed for St. Louis, the theory was expressed that he may have gone to the Missouri city because he felt he would be safer there than in Chicago. A later report from El Paso, Ill., said that two men, one believed to be Dillinger, stopped in that town for gasoline. A short time later two Indiana state highway policemen attempted to stop an automobile answering the same description as it proceeded toward Gridley, Ill., from El Paso. When the car did not heed their commands to halt, the policemen fired on it and punctured a rear tire. A mile away the car was found abandoned.

In Chicago, Capt. John Stege and a picked band of policemen were actively engaged in the search. Capt. Daniel Gilbert, head of the Cook county state's attorney's office police, led several raids on the homes of persons alleged to be friends of Dillinger or of parolees convicted to have had dealings with members of the desperado's gang.

Because of the order issued to Chicago police to kill Dillinger on sight, Chief of Detectives William Schoemaker said he had no expectations that the fugitive will come here. An intensive investigation into the bizarre escape was begun Sunday afternoon by Attorney General Philip Lutz Jr., an assistant, Edward C. Barce and an investigator, Leroy Hullett, who went to Crown Point from Indianapolis.

They conferred there with many officials, including Prosecutor Estill, and on good land are as dependable as corn, and the crop may be followed by lespedeza, or other legumes.

But the most urgent reason for planting spring oats explained County Agent Stanley is that the present farm grain supply in the county will be exhausted in most cases before spring work is finished. An early crop of spring oats will save spending cash for feed. The crop can be cut with a mower, cured and stored, and will furnish excellent roughage and grain for the work stock.

The selection of a variety of oats for spring planting is not as important as for fall planting, since winter killing is not a factor with spring oats. However, the earlier varieties are preferable because they come nearer maturing ahead of hot weather and summer legumes following the oats get an earlier start. Fulghum, or Kanon, which is a selection of the Fulghum, and the burr are the earliest varieties.
The best time for planting spring oats is just as early as possible without too much risk from freezing. This date is in early March.

There's Harm From Overuse of Sun's Rays

Many of us think that, if a little of some healing method is good, a great deal is even better. But if any one factor, recently developed, has been abused by overuse, it is sunlight. The first scientific uses of sunlight in treatment began thousands of years ago. That was long before the time of the development of the modern machines which provide artificial sunlight.

Since these machines came in, people expose themselves to ultraviolet rays without medical advice or supervision and, as a result, cases begin to appear in the practice of physicians which prove that these excessive exposures are not without danger.

The people who live in the tropics usually are dark skinned. This darkening of the skin is nature's way of protecting them against too much exposure to the sun's rays. One of the dangers of too frequent and too much exposure to ultraviolet rays is possible stimulation to the growth of tumors.

Certain people are especially sensitive to the rays of the sun, and respond to the excess exposure by the breaking out of blisters and severe inflammations.

The forms of skin disturbances following excessive exposure to the sun are many. Furthermore, there are eruptions of the skin, such as those of psoriasis and the condition called mul-

Son of 'Peck's Bad Boy' Slain

Gerald W. Peck, Chicago financier, above, killed in Seguin, Tex., in a dispute over power sites, was the grandson of George W. Peck, author of "Peck's Bad Boy," and son of the leading character of the story. Tom M. Hollamon, former U. S. marshal, is charged with shooting Peck, head of Texas power companies.

iforme erythema, which certainly are made worse by severe sunburn.

There also are some people who respond to excessive sunburn with fever blisters on the lips, a condition commonly called herpes labialis.

Farmers, especially those of advanced years, have noted the tendency for changes in the skin, particularly in those areas that are exposed to the sunlight—such as the face and the backs of the hands. You should remember that every useful method in medicine is dangerous when used to excess. The short rays of the sun are potent for good, but machines of high power never should be used unless under direction of the doctor, and those of lesser strength should be used for short periods of time only.

But Would He Walk a Mile for Any of 'em?

Noah was surprised to see three camels coming up the gangway. "Hey!" he shouted, "one of you will have to stay ashore."

"Not me," said the first ship of the desert. "I am the camel so many people swallow while straining at a goal."

"I," said the second, "am the camel whose back is broken by the last straw."

"And I," said the third and last, "am the camel which shall pass through the eye of a needle sooner than a rich man shall enter the kingdom of heaven."

Noah scratched his head in perplexity. Finally, deciding that posterity could ill spare any of these and would be lost for illustrations without them, he let them all come aboard. —Boston Transcript.
